New York City.

Dear Dr. Gregg,

I am planning to sail for two months abroad on the night of the nineteenth of this month. Are you going to be on hand sometime during the nineteenth? If so, I would run down to see you if you still would like to talk over affairs in England as you suggested in our last conversation.

I am anxious to find out whether or not it would be possible to have the statue which stands at the entrance of the Ecole de Medecin in Paris copied. You may remember it. It is by Barrias and says something about "La Nature se Devoilant devant la Science." If the statue is still as I remember it I would like to have it copied and placed in the Neurological Institute. What would your reaction to this be and how can such a thing be achieved? If any special form of official letter from McGill to the University of Paris is necessary you might drop me a line so that I could have it prepared before leaving here.

With best regards,

Ever yours,

WGP/HL.

Could you give me a letter that would help the authorities of the Luxembourg gallery purchase the statue below? Do you or J.O'Brien know a likely sculptor to copy it?
